

Two Column Layout

Left Column

The left column begins the article. Reading aloud helps students who find print hard to follow. A reader that highlights each word as it is spoken keeps the eyes and ears together, and a reader that remembers where the student stopped makes long assignments manageable.

It ends with this sentence in the left column.

Right Column

The right column continues the article. The loader rebuilds structure from the page: it finds the body text size, treats larger or bolder short lines as headings, joins wrapped lines into paragraphs, and removes the hyphens that typesetting adds at line ends.

It ends with this sentence in the right column.

Below the band, the left column resumes. Columns are read one after another, top to bottom, so a sentence is never interrupted by the text beside it. Running head.
